Texas A&M-Corpus Christi Professor of Education Receives Nomination for 2009 Outstanding Book Award

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas – Education professor Bryant Griffith’s recent book “Cultural Narration” has earned him nomination for the American Educational Research Association’s (AERA) 2009 Outstanding Book Award. Griffith teaches curriculum and instruction at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi.

AERA, founded in 1916, is the national interdisciplinary research association for 25,000 scholars who undertake research in education. The Outstanding Book Award acknowledges and honors the year’s best book in education research and development.

“Cultural Narration” is based on a series of social relationships. Griffith offers a perspective on curriculum, discourse and culture in light of the ever-shifting realities of 21st century schools. The book was issued in 2008 by Sense Publishers.

Griffith has been a member of the Texas A&M-Corpus Christi faculty since 2002. He graduated with bachelor of arts degrees in history and philosophy from York University in Canada and a bachelor’s degree in education from the University of Toronto. He earned his master of arts and doctoral degrees in educational theory from the University of Toronto.
