Texas A&M-Corpus Christi Communication Professor Named Texas Association ‘University Educator of the Year’

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas – Shawn Wahl, associate professor of communication in the Department of Communication and Theatre at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi, is the recipient of the 2008 University Educator of the Year Award presented by the Texas Speech Communication Association (TSCA).

TSCA, the largest state communication association in the nation, is a professional, academic association committed to excellence in communication instruction, student performance, research, scholarly accomplishment, professional service and political awareness. The University Educator of the Year Award recognizes individuals for their excellence in teaching as evidenced by students and colleagues. Each year, members of the association nominate faculty from colleges and universities across Texas.

Wahl, a member of the Texas A&M-Corpus Christi faculty since 2002, is also editor of the Texas Speech Communication Journal and graduate program coordinator of the department. He graduated with bachelors of arts degrees in communication and English from Angelo State University and earned his master’s degree in communication studies from Texas Tech University. He received his doctorate in communication studies from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.
