Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi Student Participating In Library of Congress Junior Fellows Internship Program

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas – Erin Nuckols, a history major at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi, has been chosen to participate in the Junior Fellows Summer Intern Program at the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C.

Nuckols and other interns will work with unprocessed collections held by the Library of Congress to prepare them for access by researchers. At the end of their assignments, interns will display and discuss their most significant discoveries during a presentation at the Thomas Jefferson Building.

Nuckols, who is from Fort Collins, Colo., recently completed her junior year at Texas A&M-Corpus Christi. She has been a member of the Honors Program for three years and will be president of the Honors Student Association in fall 2009. She has served as a University President's Ambassador and was recently appointed as one of the University's two representatives on The Texas A&M University System Chancellor's Student Advisory Board.

The Junior Fellows Summer Intern Program exposes students to a broad spectrum of library work, including preservation, reference, access standards and information management. Applicants for this highly-competitive national program are chosen based on academic achievement, letters of recommendation, and an interview with a selection official.
