Dr. Paul R. Meyer Named Vice Provost at Texas A&M-Corpus Christi

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas – Dr. Paul R. Meyer has been named to the newly-created position of vice provost at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi. For the past six years, Meyer, who works directly with University Provost Anantha Babbili, has served as assistant provost at Texas A&M University in College Station.

As vice provost, Meyer is directly responsible for the University's educational leadership and planning, the utilization and development of policies and procedures that support quality academic programming, and the supervision of Academic Affairs personnel. He also oversees the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board and TAMU Systems compliance issues, including the process for establishing new academic programs and the approval of organizational changes within Texas A&M-Corpus Christi. In addition, he is responsible for information system development and other special projects as assigned by the provost.

Meyer received his bachelor’s degree in physics and English from Rice University and later earned a master’s degree and a Ph.D. in English/Rhetoric from the University of Texas. He has served as an assistant professor of English at both Texas A&M University-College Station and New Mexico State University where his teaching and research areas included rhetoric, professional writing, and literacy.
