Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi Adopts Unified Priority College Application Initiative for Admission and Financial Aid

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas – Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi is one of 10 state universities taking part in an initiative to improve college access by adopting unified priority application dates for Admission and Financial Aid.

The Unified Priority Application Initiative was introduced for fall 2010 applicants and is now ready for the fall 2011 applicant season. The program synchronizes admission and financial aid application dates to boost the overall readiness of college bound students and to strengthen student opportunities for financial aid.

Students benefit by applying early for admission to the participating universities and for all types of federal, state, and institutional financial aid and scholarships. The statewide message-simplification process is not intended to reflect “drop-dead” application deadlines.

Other universities in the program include Lamar University, Texas State University-San Marcos, Midwestern State University, Sam Houston State University, Stephen F. Austin State University, Texas Woman’s University, Tarleton State University, University of North Texas and the University of Texas at San Antonio.
