Master of Fine Arts Candidate James Murray Blends Science and Literature to Create ‘Down the Rabbit Hole’ Exhibition

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas – An opening reception for the exhibition “Down the Rabbit Hole” by Master of Fine Arts candidate James A. Murray will be held on Friday, May 14, from 6-8 p.m. at the Islander Art Gallery, 4024 Weber Road in the Hamlin Center.

“Down the Rabbit Hole,” derived from blending science and literature and concepts by theoretical physicists Albert Einstein and Dr. Michio Kaku, was created using a variety of media including sculpture, installation and digital imagery. Murray will depict an inter-dimensional traveler within a universe containing 11 possible dimensions. The traveler, a white rabbit, is borrowed from the work of mathematician Charles Lutwidge Dodgson, otherwise known as Lewis Carroll.

Murray will donate the materials used in the exhibit to Habitat for Humanity, a non-profit, ecumenical organization that invites individuals to build houses together in partnership with families in need. The exhibit will remain on display through Saturday, May 29. The exhibit and reception are presented by Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi and the University Galleries.
