Certified Public Manager Training Program Forming New Cohort

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas – A new cohort is forming for the Certified Public Manager (CPM) training program offered through Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi. The class developed in conjunction with the William Hobby Center for Public Service begins Thursday, April 14.

The nationally-accredited statewide management development program is a comprehensive seven-course study through which public managers can acquire and apply the best practices and theory to their management behaviors and strategies using prescribed sets of professional standards. The curriculum uses theory as the foundation and applies it to practical problems facing the participant, their agency/department, and the citizens.

Created specifically for non-profit and public sector managers, the program is designed to improve the performance of managers and the organizational performance of non-profit organizations and state, local and federal government. Those who complete the program earn a national trademark designation of CPM.

Registration for courses is limited to 35 participants on a first come, first-served basis. The cost is $595 which includes all textbooks and other training materials.
