Protecting Nursing Students From Burnout

CONHS faculty and staff joined the Research and Scholarly Support Committee's Brown Bag Lunch and Learn for a presentation that featured Dr. Danielle Durant. Dr. Durant presented her preliminary research in which she asked "Do TAMUCC nursing students exhibit the three characteristics of burnout (exhaustion, cynicism, and inefficacy) as defined by the World Health Organization?"

Career Positioning: Strategically Mapping Your Early Career Development was a big success! The event featured a panel discussion by local healthcare leaders in which students had an opportunity to ask questions related to career development and other important topics. The event also provided an excellent networking opportunity for our students that allowed them to connect with experts in the field of Healthcare Administration.
Celebrations for faculty, staff, and students were a huge success during Medical Laboratory Professionals Week.

Congratulations to Karen LaNasa who won first place in the poster presentation for graduate students category at the Research Symposium! Huy Le, with his Microbiology team, won the People’s Choice Award. This project was supervised by Dr. Jean Sparks.
Preparing Islander Nurses for Success

All nurses have to pass the National Council Licensure Examination (NCLEX) to acquire a nursing license and practice. Assistant Professor and Chair of the CONHS Department of Nursing Education Dr. Pamela Greene explains recent changes to the exam, its focus on clinical judgment, and strategies that the CONHS is using to prepare Islander nursing students for success.

MSN - Education graduate student, Amiee Griffis, led the first semester nursing students in Therapeutic Communication in an activity to explore the differences in 19 cultures from around the world, what nurses should know when caring for patients from those cultures and how to ask questions to support cultural care. The students shared food from all the different cultures, too!

Community Outreach

Assistant Clinical Professor, Megan Markowsky's OB students helped the United Way pass out bags with resources to mothers on the Labor and Delivery and Postpartum floor.
